

Sue's News & Views

Shorts from my world

www.osbornecountry.com

November 19, 2015

Chris is pictured here solving one of two challenging puzzles we gave him for his birthday. We celebrated his 45th birthday by having a little party at our house, which included orange frosted cupcakes topped with pancake shape spiders.

Right before his birthday, Chris bought a very special present for himself—a 3D PRINTER! One of his first projects was to make little owls, bats and skulls to slide onto glow bracelets. Recently he made interlocking playing card trays. In case you want to make some for yourself (with your own 3D printer) he posted his design for free download on thingiverse at www.thingiverse.com/thing:1135192/.

Paris peering through the back window of our dog car (the Mazda) while I load the trunk with gear to take her and Dakota tracking. Paris can hardly wait for me to go. She LOVES to track. Dakota is a beginner having had five classes so far: she hasn't quite figured out what it is all about yet.

In the photo at right, Sierra is all decked out for an X-Ray after falling out of our Persimmon tree. Result was a hairline fracture on her left forearm. No sling, no cast; just relegated to a week of rest and no gymnastics for two weeks. She now knows not to wear flip flops when climbing trees.

Halloween Dress Up!

Rylan, Aubrey, and Sierra all spent the night the weekend before last and had to leave by 8:00 the next morning for soccer games. Because it had been a long time since they have had Grandma's special pancakes, I made pancake batter at 6:30 a.m. (before they were even up) to create a hamburger for Rylan and cereal for the girls. I took their orders when they went to bed the night before.